HONGKONG, NOVEMBER 14th, 1874.

As recently noticed, a petition has been sent in to H.E. the GOVERNOR with reference to the finding of the Court of Enquiry on the loss of the steamer White Cloud, and it may not be out of place to mention briefly the grounds upon which, as we are informed, the petition is based.

It appears that, neither the Captain nor the chief officer was properly warned that he was upon his trial with reference to the matter, and that in consequence they did not have any proper opportunity of urging upon the Court such considerations as might have had the effect of mitigating the sentence. So far as the Captain is concerned, we believe the case, though irregular, is not so hard as with respect to the Mate, as in an enquiry into the loss of a vessel, the master's conduct is implicitly enquired into also. With respect, however, to the Mate, the proceedings appear to have been of a very unusual character, and to have, in fact, been such as to take him entirely by surprise, and it is on his behalf that the petition has been sent in. He was not asked for his certificate at all until after he had given his evidence, nor was he in any way warned as to the effect which might be produced by the very evidence he was giving. Taking the ordinary standard of procedure in regard to matters of a penal and criminal character, this is clearly a very wide departure from that spirit of fairness and leniency which underlies the English Law, and which will not permit of any being taken by surprise and entrapped into admissions which may be used against him. We do not say that the same rules which have to be adhered to in criminal cases apply to a Naval Court, where the procedure admits of the evidence of the officer whose conduct is under consideration being used against him, and in this respect, goes counter to the fundamental principles of English criminal law in other Courts; but there is no doubt that the general spirit of that law should be borne in mind and acted upon, and that is not done when a man is first allowed to give his evidence and then told that that evidence will be taken as a ground for his condemnation. A warning of some kind should at least be given to him, and it is especially the case in regard to men like sailors, who are not likely to know the technicalities of law or to be able to defend their rights.

The section of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, with reference to Naval Courts, provides that if the Board of Trade or any local Marine Board has reason to believe that any Master or Mate is, from incompetency or misconduct, unfit to perform his duties, an enquiry may be instituted, and the board shall give him full opportunity of making a defence either in person or otherwise. Now it is beyond dispute that Mr. REX was entirely taken by surprise, and not only had not any opportunity of making his defence, but was allowed to give testimony unguardedly and without explanation, which was afterwards made the basis on which his certificate was withdrawn.

The Merchant Shipping Act especially provides that Courts of Enquiry shall be held with the assistance of a local or stipendiary Magistrate, from which it may fairly be inferred that it is contemplated that the matter will be treated in a judicial manner, and that at least the broad principles which would occur to any one acquainted with legal matters will not be lost sight of. Among these, giving due warning to a person who may incriminate himself is one of the most obvious, and the manner in which Mr. REX was treated was therefore a serious departure, not only from the spirit of justice which pervades the Law generally, but from the distinct intention of the plain provisions in the Merchant Shipping Act applying to the constitution and conduct of Naval Courts.

The patients at present in the Government Civil Hospital continued yesterday being removed to the building next door to the Central Police Station, known as the Hotel Victoria, and were requested to intimate that no patients should be taken to the temporary buildings instead of to the old Hospital.
